HEARING HEALTH FACTS Conventional Assumptions About Temperature and RH

A temperature of approximately 98 degrees Fahrenheir is often assumed to be the operaling temperature of a hearing instrument in the ear, since 98.6 is usually considered to be body temperature for a healthy person. In reality, 98.6 degrees is the average oral temperature of the human body. The temperature of core visceral organs, such as the liver, may be as high as 105 degrees. Except under extreme conditions, core body temperature stays essentially constant, even with varying environmental temperature. In contrast, the extremities and peripheral structures found at the surface of the body, such as the external ear, typically exhibit lower temperatures that vary with ambient temperature. For example, the temperature of the feet can drop to 77 degrees if the external environmental temperature drops to 73 degrees.

uegrees.

A common assumption is that the e... is very humid due to the ceruminous glands inside the ear canal, which are essentially the same as the apocrine sweat glands of the ampit. In reality, the unoccluded ear canal allows free interchange of air with the ambient environment and allows perspiration to evaporate:

Standard ambient temperature and relative humidity con-uitons for testing of a hearing instrument are part of stan-dardized manufacturing quality control specifications and are not necessarily representative of operating conditions in

HEARING HEALTH FACTS Conventional Assumptions About Temperature and RH

Objects stuck in your ear can cause pain and hearing loss. Usually you know something is stuck in your ear, but small children may not be aware of it. If an object becomes lodged in the year, follow these eps:

Do not attempt to remove the foreign object by probing ith a cotton swab, matchstick or any other tool. To do so to risk pushing the object farther into the ear and damagis to risk poshing the object farther into the ear and damaging the fragile structures of the middle ear.

If the object is clearly visible, is pliable and ca be grasped easily with tweezers, genlly remove it.

I'ry using the poil of gravity tilt the head to the affected side. Do not strike the victim's head, but shake it gently in the direction of the ground to try to dislodge the object.

If the foreign object is an insect, tilt the person's head so the car with the offentling insects upward. Try to flood the insect out by pouring mineral oil, olive oil or baby oil into the ear. It should be warm but not hot. As you pour the oil, you can ease the entry of the oil by straightening the ear canal. Poll the ear lobe gently backward and upward. The insect should suffocate and may flour out in the oil bath.

Do not use oil to remove any object other than an insect. Do not use this method if there is any suspicion of a perforation in the eardrum (pain, bleeding or discharge from the car).

(ear).

If these methods fail or the person continues to experience pain in the ear, reduced hearing or a sensation of something lodged in the ear, seek medical assistance. Bandera Hearing Aid Center 830-796-7676 • 611 Main Street
